

THE REEVES BROTHERS

The nostalgic sound of classic country music is back, and it's come in the form of The Reeves Brothers. Deeply rooted in the Natural state of Arkansas, Matt and Cole Reeves spent their younger years growing up in the small town of Pahrump, Nevada down Stagecoach Road, where they lived behind The Stagestop Bar, a good ole honky tonk where their father, Jack Reeves, headlined playing country music five nights a week. Needless to say, country music runs like blood in their veins, and playing it comes as naturally as breathing. From childhood, the brothers were surrounded by mentors and influences, such as, Dick Dale, Red Simpson, and Gib Guilbeau, ergo perfecting their craft with each passing day. As the boys grew older, they each pursued solo careers, but soon realized that family was at the heart of who they are, the heartbeat of their music. Come 2013. The Reeves Brothers band was born, and they released their first full-length album, being "deemed worthy of being played on a jukebox also stocked with the likes of Charlie Rich, David Allan Coe, and Merle Haggard, with voices as smooth as top-shelf bourbon." (The Las Vegas Review) After a successful album release and an ever-busy tour schedule with their growing fan base, the brothers received the Ameripolitan Award for "Honky-Tonk Group of the Year® in 2018. Although The Reeves Brothers have already created a thriving music career journey for themselves, they have only just begun. The last two years saw them opening for Justin Moore and Craig Morgan, and they quickly caught the attention of accomplished hit songwriter/producer, Phil "Philbilly" O'Donnell.

As they build their team, the Arkansas duo is quickly establishing themselves as a fixture in the Nashville music scene. Get ready for their classic country, Honky-Tonk sound to revive your country soul and grace your radio speakers soon.
